NEW DELHI: Who will pay for loss and damage caused by the climate crisis? And who will pay for what countries should do to adapt to climate change?

A new controversy is brewing at the UN Climate Conference (COP27) following Gaston Browne, Prime Minister of Antigua and Barbuda's comment on Tuesday that highly polluting emerging economies such as China and India should also contribute to a Loss and Damage compensation fund

The thinking thus far has been only on having historical polluters (read: the developed world) pay for this

There is also a subtle push from developed countries to include China and India in the donor base for a new, collective quantified goal (NCOG) for the post 2025 period which will begin from the floor of $100 billion per year that developed countries were supposed to pay from 2020 onwards, and there is also a push to increase the donor base for the Adaptation Fund, observers said.

Browne was speaking on behalf of the Association of Small Island States (AOSIS)on Tuesday when he said: "We all know that the People's COP27 Republic of China. India EGYPT - they're major polluters, and the polluter must pay. I don't think that there's any free pass for any country and I don't say this with any acrimony," Reuters reported on November 9

Indian officials who are part of the delegation said on Wednesday that the country is already funding and implementing projects for south-south cooperation and resilience building. "We (Indians) are also victims of emissions from developed countries and we are also paying for our adaptation and loss and damage and helping oth-

Indian officials pointed to India's role in creating coalitions such as the Coalition of Disaster Resilient Infrastructure (CDRI), and campaigns such as Infrastructure for the Resilient Island States (IRIS). One official said India's per cap > ita emissions are a third of the global average. During informal consultations of matters related to the adaptation fund convened on November 9, parties discussed a draft text proposed by the co-facilitators.

According to observers of the Third World Network, an advocacy organisation working on north-south affairs, on the issue of doubling the collective provision of climate finance for adaptation. the US has requested deletion of "in the context of doubling the collective provision of climate finance from developed to developing countries.

It also proposed deleting a reference to "invites developed country Parties" since "all the countries" should be invited "to contribute to the AF." TWN's bulletin on Thursday said The Glasgow Climate Pact urged developed countries to at least double their collective provision of climate finance for adaptation to developing country Parties from 2019 levels. The Africa Group, and Saudi Arabia for the Arab group and China, said they did not support the notion of diversifying the fund's contributor base according to TWN's bulletin. TWN also pointed that report of the Adaptation Fund Board revealed there are outstanding pledges worth $174.6 million. Indian officials confirmed that developed countries want to expand the donor base for the new climate finance and that India has always resisted this. "The Paris Agreement has a provision of including those in the donor base who are willing and able to do so,'

"It is also important to highlight the first official said

Independent experts said letters@hindustantimes.com

AOSIS' comments urging that India and China to also pay up for Loss and Damage, goes against the principle of south-south solidarity because it is G77 (a group of developing nations, now numbering 134) and China which had first proposed that Loss and Damage funding be included in the formal agenda of COP27.

"The onus of providing loss and damage finance lies with the rich industrialised countries whose historical emissions are responsible for the climate crisis the world is facing right now. Their lack of action for decades is causing supercharged storms, devastating floods and unprecedented heat waves. It is immoral for rich countries, such as the US, who have not paid their fair share of climate finance, to shift the burden onto developing countries," said Harjeet Singh, head of global politica strategy at Climate Action Network International.

Climate finance at market rates not ideal, says India be taken by 2024.

NEW DELHI: India, speaking on behalf of developing countries, has said access to climate finance at market rates will lead to further financial stress on developing countries

"Going ahead, if ambitious climate targets have to be achieved. these need to be backed by intentions reflected by ambitious, appropriate, and reasonable access to financial resources by developing countries," Union environment minister Bhupender Yaday said on behalf of the Like Minded Developing Countries at a high level ministerial dialogue on a new collective quantified goal (NCQG) from a floor of $100 billion per year on Wednesday. The Standing Committee on to meet the targets set by developing countries in their Nationally Determined Contributions (NDCs). Yadav said. "Climate actions to meet the NDC targets require financial, technological, and capacity-building support from developed countries. The ambitious goal set down by the developing countries requires substantive enhancement in climate finance from the floor of $100 billion per vear." he said.

"The mobilisation needs to be led by developed countries and should be long-term ... . The commitment of $100 billion made in 2009 by developed countries, was Six upcoming conventional urea plants with a capacity of about 1.3 million tonne each will also help to achieve the self-suf ficiency milestone by 2024-2025. These will be commissioned this year at Barauni (Bihar) and Sindhri (Jhark hand), said the official.
